

Connection was a breeze

"I would recommend it to anyone.
Connection was a breeze."

Andrew Brody of Devonport recently decided to make the change to natural gas. Once the meter was connected by Tas Gas, Andrew waited for his gasfitter, Lee Hacker, to install his Bosch hot water and Braemar ducted heating systems. His patient wait paid off. "We were able to see, first-hand, an excellent and very well-planned operation," said Andrew.

"Between Lee Hacker, the gasfitter, and Newman's heating team, the coordination of work was professional. Each knew the exact job required to complete the task," said Andrew.

The installers had "no mishaps and their work was clean, with all rubbish removed. One went along in the ceiling laying the ducting and the other installed the outlets".

The ducted heating was split into two zones. "We have two zones in order to use the system most effectively and efficiently. This means we can heat our living areas or bedrooms as we like."

"We also have an outlet into the downstairs sewing room and the spare bedroom. Now even the coldest parts of the house will be warm in winter."

The Bosch hot water system was set up outside and replaced the old electric system. The Brodys have also had controllers connected to give them the added benefit of varying the temperature to their personal needs.

"We now have three controllers, one in each bathroom and one in the kitchen. I have my own temperature setting, which I set for the shower, and this overrides the kitchen. When I'm finished I switch it back."

The delivery of the product was very professional. "Lee brought the work forward a day to ensure he wasn't hampered by the forecasted rain. The next day it did rain and the work had been completed because of Lee's forward planning," said Andrew.

"The support provided by all, including Tas Gas and their preferred suppliers, was excellent. My wife and I are confident that we have chosen the best product. Tas Gas should be proud to know that the delivery of their product and the advice given to us was from very professional workers.

"I would recommend it to anyone. Connection was a breeze."
